A 10x10 grid is partitioned into 16 rectangles of different sizes and colors. The colors used are light blue, light green, light yellow, light orange, and a slightly darker blue. The rectangles are arranged in a complex, non-uniform pattern. The top row consists of a large light blue rectangle on the left, a medium light green rectangle in the middle, and a large light yellow rectangle on the right. The second row features a small light green rectangle, a small light orange rectangle, a large light green rectangle, a medium light orange rectangle, and the continuation of the light yellow rectangle. The third row includes a small light yellow rectangle, a small light blue rectangle, the continuation of the large light green rectangle, a medium light yellow rectangle, a small light blue rectangle, and the continuation of the light yellow rectangle. The fourth row shows a large light orange rectangle, the continuation of the large light green rectangle, a medium light yellow rectangle, a medium light green rectangle, and a small light orange rectangle. The fifth row is composed of a large light blue rectangle and the continuation of the light yellow rectangle. The grid is fully covered by these rectangles, with no empty space.

B. Read the source code below carefully and write its output on a clean bond paper.
